What's new in Match Solitaire:

- Gamescom preview There is one thing in Modern Warfare that has always let people down - its bad game design. It's what has let Call of Duty down after ages as it has been lifted, pushed, clawed at, and, well, generally screwed to death by almost every other developer in the video game business. But it's often overlooked that the overall design of COD's combat has developed over the years, and is in many ways an evolution. Re-release: Battle Rifle: the added jam-firing range adds much more strategy and handling, meaning it's not bullet spongy anymore. Fully-automatic now, with a semi-automatic option (2x for testing), and the whole system works like a Swiss watch. Then the easy AI meant to make you all bullet spongy is no longer present, and the weapons work like they used to be. Damage numbers being on separate meters inside the HUD now, rather than having a line extending out like a hit indicator itself. Weapon recoil being picked up by the shot rather than integrated into the weapon layout, meaning minor mis-hits no longer make you stutter run in place. Repositioning yourself on the spot after use, rather than staring frozen on an open spot for a while. And, most surprisingly of all, a weapon reload indicator on the bottom of the screen. But the best thing about the new MW3 gunplay is that it is simply incredible, and some of the best gunplay not found in any other first-person shooter. For you, COD fans, this is about what you'd expect at this point in the console generation. For everyone else, this will be the closest you'll get to a full-fledged shooter released on a new hardware platform in its entire history. Yes, it looks incredible, but the real problem is that it isn't ready yet. The multi-million dollars that have been poured into this game's development in the past eight months still show - this is a major game, but no multiplayer mode is live yet. A story mode, and classic multiplayer modes, are trickily hidden away inside the menus, and for the actual single player experiences, we are probably looking at about five or six offline campaign-esque levels. Which actually comes out to quite a lot when you think about all the hundred hours that will be required to finish this game... The reason why this remains something of a work in progress is down

Monday on Fox News Channel's "Fox & Friends," Judge Andrew Napolitano tried to explain "the fly in the ointment" surrounding Hillary Clinton and the email scandal. When asked what judge he would choose to step in if Hillary Clinton is charged with a crime, he said "I have no respect for Hillary Clinton." "Republicans are using Hillary Clinton to help elect Donald Trump for personal financial gain, and in exchange she holds one advantage. She is not a career prosecutor, and she is not going to be sanctioned," he explained. "All she's going to be sanctioned for is having carelessness and negligence. The Republicans and the Trump campaign are going to twist that to criminal intent, because that is what they're doing, and the judge may follow the echo chamber of what is being said in the media rather than what is reported in The New York Times or The Washington Post." "The truth is, Hillary Clinton is doing Donald Trump a favor by making him the Republican nominee," he added. Follow Jeff Poor on Twitter @jeff_poor you too!" "Yeah, it
